

After years of being invaded by telemarketers during our limited time at home after working all day, we're finally enjoying the privacy we as Americans thought we were entitled to. We are intelligent enough to read mail offers when they come or seek information about possible purchases or services that are available. We do not need to be personally contacted by these individuals. PLEASE do not allow our privacy or personal space and time to again be invaded by telemarketers. Leave Indiana's law as it stands. The large volume of participation by Indiana citizens should be a clear indication of how they feel about telemarketing practices!
